16 BACKGROUND

17 Petitioners, Kelleth Chinn and Caroline Wampole, are 18 musicians professionally known as the musical group "Big Soul", 19 who entered into two written agreements with Respondent, George 20 Tobin, on June 22, 1993 - - an "Artist Agreement" and a "Personal 21 Management Agreement." Respondent is the owner of a business that 22 is engaged in the recording and publishing of music. At all 23 relevant times herein, both parties resided in and did business 24 in the State of California.

25 Under the "Artist Agreement", petitioners agreed to render 26 their "exclusive recording services" to Respondent, that 27 Respondent would be the sole owner of all master recordings 28 recorded during the term of the agreement, that Respondent and

1 anyone else authorized by Respondent (e.g., a major record label) 2 would have exclusive rights to manufacture records from these 3 master recordings, and to permit the public performance of these 4 recordings; that Respondent would hold the publishing rights to 5 any compositions recorded by petitioners, and that Respondent 6 could subsequently assign all or part of these rights to a 7 publishing company. In return, Respondent agreed to commercially 8 exploit and finance the production of petitioner's recordings, and 9 to pay various recording costs, advances to petitioners, and 10 royalties. The Artist Agreement also provided that Respondent 11 could produce, at his discretion, music videos, and that 12 Respondent would be the sole owner of the rights to any such 13 videos, with petitioners entitled to royalties based on any 14 profits that may result from the commercial exploitation of such 15 videos.

16 Pursuant to the Artist Agreement, Tobin arranged for 17 Petitioners' use of a professional recording studio and sound 18 engineer, and secured and paid for the services of session 19 musicians to record with Petitioners. Tobin also undertook 20 efforts to promote Petitioners' recordings with record industry 21 executives and with radio programmers through meetings and the 22 distribution of promotional CD recordings. Respondent paid over 23 $43,000 for recording studio time, recording tape, the services of 24 studio musicians and the sound engineer, and costs of other 25 materials.

26 Under the "Personal Management Agreement", petitioners agreed 27 that Respondent would serve as their "exclusive personal manager" 28 and "adviser . . . in connection with all matters relating to

1 Artist's professional career in all branches of the entertainment 2 industry. . . ." The Personal Management Agreement gave 3 Respondent the authority to function as petitioners' attorney-in-4 fact with respect to various matters. Of primary interest here, 5 under paragraph 3(c) of the Personal Management Agreement, 6 Respondent was authorized, "subject to Artist's approval after 7 consultation with Manager and in accordance with paragraph 7 8 hereof, [to] prepare, negotiate, consummate, sign, execute and 9 deliver for Artist, in Artist's name or in Artist's behalf, any 10 and all agreements, documents and contracts for Artist's 11 services. . . ." Paragraph 7 of the Personal Management Agreement 12 states: "Artist understands that Manager is not an employment 13 agent, theatrical agent, or artist's manager, and that Manager has 14 not offered, attempted or promised to obtain employment or 15 engagements for Artist, and that Manager is not permitted, 16 obligated, authorized or expected to do so. Manager will consult 17 with and advise Artist with respect to the selection, engagement 18 and discharge of theatrical agents, artists' managers, employment 19 agencies and booking agents (herein collectively called "talent 20 agents") but manager is not authorized hereunder to actually 21 select, engage, discharge or direct any such talent agent in the 22 performance to [sic] the duties of such talent agent."

23 As compensation for respondent's services provided under the 24 Personal Management Agreement, petitioners agreed to pay 25 commissions to the respondent in an amount equal to 20% of 26 petitioners' gross earnings in the entertainment industry, 27 including but not limited to earnings derived from activities in 28 motion pictures, television, radio, theatrical engagements, public

1 appearances in places of entertainment, records and recording, 2 except that respondent would not be entitled to commissions on any 3 record royalties or advances paid to petitioners pursuant to the 4 Artist Agreement. In accordance with this provision, Respondent 5 did not deduct any commissions from the advances that were paid to 6 Petitioners pursuant to the Artist Agreement.

7       The term of the Personal Management Agreement is defined as 8 "equal to and co-terminus to the term of the Artist Agreement", 9 while Artist Agreement states that it "shall terminate 10 concurrently with the [Personal] Management Agreement should the 11 [Personal] Management Agreement terminate for any reasons 12 whatsoever . . . ."

13       On or about May 17, 1996, respondent filed an action in the 14 Los Angeles Superior Court against Kelleth Chinn, Caroline 15 Wampole, and various other defendants seeking damages for breach 16 of contract with respect to obligations purportedly arising from 17 this Artist Agreement and Personal Management Agreement. Shortly 18 thereafter, petitioners filed this petition to determine 19 controversy, alleging that respondent acted in the capacity of a 20 talent agency without having been licensed by the State of 21 California, and that these two agreements are void from their 22 inception and unenforceable by virtue of respondent's violation of 23 Labor Code §1700.5.

24       Pursuant to both parties' claims that this controversy could 25 be decided without an evidentiary hearing, a pre-hearing 26 conference was held on October 7, 1996 in San Francisco, 27 California, before the undersigned attorney for the Labor 28 Commissioner, specially designated to hear this matter.

1 Petitioners were represented by David D. Stein; respondent was 2 represented by David C. Phillips, David M. Given and Steven F.
3 Rohde. Based on the evidence and argument presented at this 4 hearing, and after considering the post-hearing briefs and 5 declarations that were filed, the Labor Commissioner adopts the 6 following determination.

7 LEGAL ANALYSIS

8 At all times relevant herein, Respondent was not licensed as 9 a talent agency. Labor Code §1700.5 provides that "no person 10 shall engage in or carry on the occupation of a talent agency 11 without first procuring a license therefor from the Labor 12 Commissioner." The term "talent agency" is defined at Labor Code 13 §1700.4(a) as "a person or corporation who engages in the 14 occupation of procuring, offering, promising or attempting to 15 procure employment or engagements for an artist or artists, except 16 that the activities of procuring, offering or promising to procure 17 recording contracts for an artist or artists shall not of itself 18 subject a person or corporation to regulation and licensing." It 19 is undisputed that petitioners are artists under Labor Code 20 section 1700.4(b), as "musical artists," "composers," and 21 "lyricists" are expressly defined as "artists.". The question 22 that is presented here is whether respondent acted as a "talent 23 agency" within the meaning of section 1700.4(a).

24 In essence, petitioners' case boils down to the allegation 25 that respondent "procured employment" for Big Soul, within the 26 meaning of Labor Code section 1700,4(a), by obtaining their 27 songwriting services for his own music publishing business, and 28 thereby violated the Act by not being licensed as a talent agent

1 in accordance with Labor Code section 1700.5. This claim is 2 succinctly presented in the Petition to Determine Controversy as 3 follows: "Petitioners allege that Respondent wrongfully seeks to 4 secure for himself valuable publishing rights in the original 5 compositions authored by Petitioners."<sup>1</sup> No evidence of any sort 6 was presented to indicate that Respondent procured, offered, 7 attempted or promised to procure employment for Petitioners, with 8 respect to Petitioner's song writing services, for any person or 9 entity other than the Respondent himself and Respondent's music 10 publishing business. We do not believe that this alone would 11 establish a violation of the Talent Agencies Act, in that a person

13 <sup>1</sup> Although Labor Code section 1700.4(a) exempts "procuring, 14 offering, or promising to procure recording contracts for an 15 artist" from the scope of activities or which a talent agency 16 license is required, this exemption does not expressly extend to 17 the procurement of music publishing contracts. The Talent 18 Agencies Act has long been construed by the courts as a remedial 19 statute intended for the protection of artists. "[T]he clear 20 object of the Act is to prevent improper persons from being 21 [talent agents] and to regulate such activity for the protection 22 of the public. . . ." Buchwald v. Superior Court (1967) 254
23 Cal.App.2d 347, 351. See also Waisbren v. Peppercorn Productions 24 (1995) 41 Cal.App.4th 246. As with all remedial legislation, 25 exemptions must be strictly construed and cannot be extended 26 beyond their express provisions. To do otherwise would defeat the 27 remedial purpose of the legislation.

28 Respondent argues, however, that the rights granted to him under the music publishing provision of the Artist Agreement are expressly defined to include only those musical compositions that are "recorded by [Petitioners] under this [Artist] Agreement", that these music publishing rights were therefore dependent upon and "merely incidental to" the recording contract, and thus, that these music publishing rights fall within the statutory exemption for recording contracts. This argument ignores the fact that music publishing and recording are two separate endeavors, that musicians who compose and record their own songs may have separate music publishing and recording contracts, that there are recording artists who are not songwriters, and that there are songwriters who are not recording artists. We therefore conclude that music publishing and songwriting does not fall within the recording contract exemption, regardless of whether the right to publish an artist's music is limited only to compositions that are contained on that artist's record.

1 or entity who employs an artist does not "procure employment" for 2 that artist, within the meaning of Labor Code section 1700.04(a), 3 by directly engaging the services of that artist. Instead, we 4 hold that the "activity of procuring employment," under the Talent 5 Agencies Act, refers to the role an agent plays when acting as an 6 intermediary between the artist whom the agent represents and the 7 third-party employer who seeks to engage the artist's services.

8       Petitioners' novel argument would mean that every television 9 or film production company that directly hires an actor, and that 10 every concert producer that directly engages the services of a 11 musical group, without undertaking any communications or 12 negotiations with the actor's or musical group's talent agent, 13 would itself need to be licensed as a talent agency under the Act.
14 To suggest that any person who engages the services of an artist 15 for himself is engaged in the occupation of procuring employment 16 for that artist, and that such person must therefore be licensed 17 as a talent agent is to radically expand the reach of the Talent 18 Agencies Act beyond recognition. The Act "must be given a 19 reasonable and common sense construction in accordance with the 20 apparent purpose and intention of the lawmakers - - one . . . that 21 will lead to wise policy rather than mischief or absurdity."
22 Buchwald v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal.App.2d 347, 354-355.
23 The purpose of the Act was to require licensing of agents, that 24 is, individuals who represent artists by attempting to obtain 25 employment for such artists with third party employers. We can 26 find nothing in the legislative history of the Talent Agencies Act 27 that would even remotely indicate any legislative intent to 28 require the licensing of employers who directly offer employment

1 to artists, and to construe the Act in such a manner would lead to 2 absurd results. Nor are we aware of any prior Labor Commissioner 3 determinations or court decisions that have held that an employer 4 violates the Talent Agencies Act by engaging the services of an 5 artist for himself without being licensed as a talent agent. The 6 cases cited by Petitioners - - Church v. Brown (1994) TAC 52-92
7 and Humes v. MarGil Ventures, Inc. (1985) 174 Cal.App.3d 486 - - 8 do not lend support to that contention.

9 The respondent in Church v. Brown was not licensed as a 10 talent agent and was employed as the casting director for the film 11 production company which produced the film "Stolen Moments" and 12 which employed Thomas Haden Church as an actor in the production 13 of this film. But those were not the facts that the Labor 14 Commissioner relied on in holding that Ross Brown had violated the 15 Talent Agencies Act. Indeed, there is no requirement that a 16 casting director employed by a production company and who works 17 exclusively for that production company be licensed as a talent 18 agent in order to hire actors to work for the production company.
19 Rather, the Labor Commissioner determined that Brown initially 20 violated the Act by engaging in fraudulent activities outside the 21 scope of his employment as a casting director that violated his 22 primary duty to the producers and that created a conflict of 23 interest between himself and the producers. Specifically, Brown 24 created a false resume for Church, containing several false 25 credits regarding Church's prior work; as a means of ensuring that 26 Church would get hired by the "Stolen Moments" production company.
27 Thereafter, Brown told Church that he expected to be paid 28 commissions equal to 15% of Church's gross earnings on "Stolen

1 Moments". Following the completion of "Stolen Moments", Brown 2 undertook continuous efforts to procure employment for Church - - 3 with third party employers - - and repeatedly promised Church that 4 he would procure such employment. These activities included 5 arranging employment interviews, sending out resumes and 6 photographs, and calling casting directors. Thus, despite the 7 fact that Brown's business relationship with Church began while 8 Brown was the casting director for the production company that 9 employed Church, the true nature of Brown's role - - based on the 10 specific evidence presented - - was that he went far beyond his 11 job as the production company's casting agent to become Church's 12 talent agent.

13       In Humes v. MarGil Ventures, Inc., supra, 174 Cal.App.3d 486, 14 the court reversed the lower court's confirmation of the Labor 15 Commissioner's determination against a respondent, holding that 16 the respondent's right to due process was violated when the Labor 17 Commissioner proceeded with a hearing that respondent was unable 18 to attend because of his incarceration. The appellate court 19 decision did not address the substantive merits of the controversy 20 between the artist and the putative agent, and did not review the 21 Labor Commissioner's determination of the merits. In its 22 recitation of facts, however, the court noted that in 1978 23 respondent Gilbert Cabot entered into an agreement whereby he was 24 to act as Mary Humes "personal manager", that two years later 25 Humes and Cabot formed a "theatrical production company" called 26 MarGil Ventures "for the purpose of developing and advancing 27 Humes' professional acting career", that Humes then entered into 28 an "exclusive employment agreement" with MarGil, and that one year

1 later Humes filed a petition to determine controversy with the 2 Labor Commissioner under Labor Code section 1700.44, seeking a 3 determination that Cabot and MarGil violated the Talent Agencies 4 Act by procuring employment for her and negotiating contracts with 5 third party employers without having been licensed under Labor 6 Code section 1700.5. The essence of the Labor Commissioner's 7 determination, and the reason that respondents' procurement 8 activities were found by the Labor Commissioner to have violated 9 the Act, was that MarGil was a "theatrical production company" in 10 name only; that it was not engaged in the production of any 11 entertainment or theatrical enterprises, but rather, merely 12 functioned as a loan-out company for providing Humes' artistic 13 services to third party producers. Humes' "employment agreement" 14 with MarGil notwithstanding, these third party producers were the 15 persons or entities with whom she was seeking employment. And it 16 was Cabot's activities as a talent agent - -his efforts in 17 procuring and attempting to procure employment for Humes with 18 these third party producers - - that violated the Talent Agencies 19 Act.

20 The Labor Commissioner reached the determination that it did 21 in MarGil by examining the substantive reality behind the 22 contractual language. "The court, or as here, the Labor 23 Commissioner is free to search out illegality lying behind the 24 form in which the transaction has been cast for the purpose of 25 concealing such illegality." Buchwald v. Superior Court (1967) 26 254 Cal.App.2d 347, 355. At the pre-hearing conference in this 27 matter, the parties were ordered to submit declarations or some 28 offer of proof as to whether respondent promised or attempted to 1 procure or did procure employment for petitioners with any third 2 parties in violation of the Talent Agencies Act. The undersigned 3 hearing officer invited the submission of this sort of evidence 4 precisely in order to look beyond the written agreements, to 5 determine whether these agreements were merely a subterfuge 6 intended to conceal the actual nature of the parties' business 7 relationship. Petitioners' papers filed in response to this order 8 failed to present any evidence, or offer of proof, that respondent 9 ever procured or promised or offered or attempted to procure 10 employment for petitioners with any third party.<sup>2</sup> That lack of 11 evidence as to promises or offers to obtain employment with third 12 parties or actual procurement activities is what distinguishes 13 this case from Buchwald and its progeny. Here, search as we 14 might, we are unable to discern any "illegality lying behind the 15 form in which the transaction has been cast."

17 <sup>2</sup> Petitioners did present evidence that Tobin "made several 18 attempts to obtain major [record] label distribution for Big Soul" 19 and had contacts with at least one European "subpublisher". These 20 activities were consistent with Tobin's rights under the Artist 21 Agreement, with respect to his ownership of Big Soul's recordings 22 and compositions. Tobin was not negotiating with these record 23 companies and subpublishers to employ Big Soul, but rather, to 24 distribute Big Soul's records and compositions (both of which were 25 owned by Tobin, the employer of Big Soul's artistic services). In 26 this respect, Tobin's role was analogous to an independent 27 television production company that hires actors and other 28 necessary employees for the production, that bears the expenses incurred in completing the production, that owns the movie or television series that it produced, and that has the right to enter into distribution agreements with networks for this movie or series. The Talent Agencies Act does not require that an independent television producer be licensed to engage in such activities. There is no reason to treat an independent music producer any differently. And the evidence presented here leaves no doubt that Tobin is a bona fide music producer, in contrast to the fictitious "theatrical production" company that was created in MarGil for the purpose "loaning out" the artist's services to third party producers as a means of evading the Act's licensing requirement.

1           Petitioners argue that the agreements that are the subject of 2 this dispute are illegal on their face in that they contain the 3 promise to procure employment that triggers the need for a talent 4 agency license. This argument is unavailing. As discussed above, 5 there are no provisions in the Artist Agreement which, on their 6 face, are violative of the Talent Agencies Act. The Personal 7 Management Agreement is worded in a manner that carefully avoids 8 violating the Act. The paragraph of the Personal Management 9 Agreement that purports to give Tobin the authority to negotiate 10 and consummate employment agreements on behalf of Big Soul grants 11 this authority to Respondent "in accordance with" another 12 paragraph of the Agreement that states that Tobin "is not 13 permitted, obligated, authorized, or expected" to obtain 14 employment or engagements for Big Soul, and that Tobin shall 15 consult with Big Soul in the selection or engagement of any talent 16 agent. It would be an understatement to say that these seemingly 17 contradictory provisions, taken together, are less than a model of 18 clarity. But absent any evidence to the contrary, we are forced 19 to conclude that it was the parties' intent that these contract 20 provisions be construed in a manner that complies with the Talent 21 Agencies Act.

22           It is a basic principle of contract law that a contract must 23 be given such an interpretation as will make it lawful, if it can 24 be done without violating the intentions of the parties. (Civil 25 Code section 1643.) Pursuant to Labor Code section 1700.44(d), a 26 person not licensed as a talent agent may "act in conjunction 27 with, and at the request of, a licensed talent agency in the 28 negotiation of a contract." See, Barr v. Rothenberg (1992)

1 TAC 14-90 [dismissing petition on ground that unlicensed "manager" 2 who engaged in negotiations for artist's employment did so in 3 conjunction with and at the request of petitioner's licensed 4 talent agency]. We therefore construe paragraphs 3(c) and 7 of 5 the Personal Management Agreement as allowing Tobin to engage in 6 only those procurement activities, and only under those 7 circumstances that are permitted by Labor Code section 1700.44(d).
8 Here, had Petitioners presented any evidence that Tobin, without 9 acting in conjunction with and at the request of a licensed talent 10 agency selected by Big Soul, made any promises or undertook any 11 attempts to obtain or negotiate the terms of employment for Big 12 Soul with third party employers, there would be a basis to 13 conclude that the prohibitory language contained in paragraph 7 of 14 Personal Management Agreement, and its adoption by reference into 15 paragraph 3(c) of that Agreement, was nothing more than a pretext 16 designed to misrepresent or conceal the true nature of Tobin's 17 activities. But without such evidence in this regard, we must 18 conclude that the prohibitory language of the Personal Management 19 Agreement means what it says, and was not a subterfuge. See, 20 Raden v. Laurie (1953) 120 Cal.App.2d 778.

21 ORDER

22 For the reasons set forth above, the petition to determine 23 controversy is hereby DISMISSED on the ground that Petitioners 24 failed to present evidence that Respondent engaged in the 25 occupation of a talent agency, within the meaning of Labor Code 26 section 1700.4(a), so as to require licensure under Labor Code 27 section 1700.5. The Talent Agencies Act does not therefore 28 operate to make either the Artist Agreement or the Personal

1 Management Agreement unlawful or void ab initio.

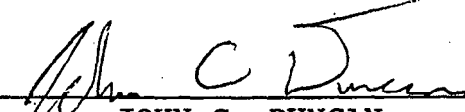

2 We express no opinion on the question of whether an agreement 3 requiring artists to provide their artistic services exclusively 4 to the same person who is representing those artists under the 5 terms of a personal management agreement results in an inherent 6 conflict of interest and the inevitable violation of the personal 7 manager's fiduciary duties towards those artists, or whether such 8 a conflict of interest or violation of fiduciary duties existed 9 here. We leave that issue for the court to decide in the context 10 of the ongoing litigation between these parties, as the Labor 11 Commissioner is without jurisdiction to proceed further, having 12 found that based on the evidence here, no talent agency license 13 was required.
