How to request a qualified medical evaluation

You may request a medical evaluation:

1. If your claim is delayed or denied and you need a medical evaluation to find out if the claim is payable.
2. To find out if you are permanently disabled in some way or if you'll need future medical treatment.
3. If you disagree with what your treating physician says about your medical condition.

The physician performing this evaluation is called a qualified medical evaluator (QME). Read the Division of Workers' Compensation (DWC) Medical Unit QME fact sheet to learn more about QMEs. If you are represented, your attorney and the claims administrator may agree on the doctor to examine you. This doctor is called an agreed medical evaluator (AME).

To receive a list of QMEs to choose from, complete the attached form and mail it to the DWC Medical Unit. Ask your treating physician to help if you don't know what kind of doctor should look at your injury.

You might also need to see a QME if the insurance company disagrees with something in your claim. In that case, the insurance company will give you the form to request a QME. When this happens, you have 10 days to request a QME list by sending the form to the DWC Medical Unit. If you don't send the form within 10 days of receiving it, the insurance company will have the right to request the QME list and select the kind of doctor you'll see.

Within 20 working days of the request, the DWC Medical Unit will send a list (also called a panel) of three QMEs to you and the insurance company. QME lists are randomly selected and do not represent your employer or the insurance company.

You have 10 days from the date the list is printed and mailed to select a QME from the list, make an appointment and tell the insurance company which doctor you picked, and the date of your appointment. If you don't do this within 10 days, the insurance company will have the right to pick the doctor you'll see and make the appointment.
