27 INTRODUCTION

28 The above-captioned petition was filed on May 15, 2000, by VICTORIA STROUSE, (hereinafter "Petitioner" or Strouse), alleging that CORNER OF THE SKY, INC., dba CORNER OF THE SKY ENTERTAINMENT INC., (hereinafter "Respondent"), acted as an unlicensed talent agent in violation of Labor Code §1700.5¹. The petitioner seeks a determination voiding ab initio the 1996 oral and subsequent written management agreement between the parties.

Respondent filed his answer on June 19, 2000. A hearing

¹ All statutory citations will refer to the California Labor Code unless otherwise specified.

1 was scheduled and commenced in the Los Angeles office of the Labor 2 Commissioner on October 6, 2000. Petitioner was represented by 3 Matthew H. Schwartz of Green & Schwartz, LLP; respondent appeared 4 through his attorney Jay M. Spillane of Fox & Spillane LLP. Due 5 consideration having been given to the testimony, documentary 6 evidence, briefs and arguments presented, the Labor Commissioner 7 adopts the following determination of controversy.

8 9 FINDINGS OF FACT

10 1. Respondent, once a literary talent agent for the 11 William Morris Agency, opted for a career change and in 1996 became 12 a literary manager. In October of 1996, the parties entered into 13 an oral contract whereby respondent would manage petitioner's 14 career as a motion picture screenwriter. According to the 15 respondent, managing petitioner's career included, inter alia, 16 reviewing her work, advising her as to which works were marketable, 17 utilizing his "connections" to obtain a licensed talent agent and 18 "shopping" her screenplays for the ultimate goal of selling 19 petitioner's product.

20 2. During 1997, respondent focused on selling two 21 completed screenplays, titled "Chick Flick" eventually renamed 22 "Just Like a Woman" and "Mary Jane's Last Dance". In an effort to 23 sell the screenplays, respondent admittedly, "sent the transcript 24 ['Chick Flick'] to everyone [he] knew." Included in those 25 submissions were various producers from Disney, Touchstone 26 Pictures, New Line Cinema, and Fox Studios. Respondent conducted 27 these activities ostensibly in the same manner as he did while 28 working as a literary agent for the William Morris Agency.

1 3. Respondent testified in great length about the 2 motion picture industry's two-tiered screenplay purchasing process.
3 He stated that in his experience, if a producer showed interest in 4 a shopped screenplay, the producer would then ask a studio to 5 option or purchase the script. Accordingly, it was the studio who 6 made the final purchasing decision. Occasionally, respondent would 7 send petitioner's screenplays directly to a studio if requested to 8 do so by a producer. The focus of respondent's argument was that 9 if a producer had shown interest and a studio optioned the 10 screenplay, it was his intent to bring in a licensed talent agent 11 to negotiate the terms of the deal. Neither of these prerequisites 12 occurred with petitioner's work throughout 1997.

13 4. On March 4, 1998, the parties memorialized the prior 14 verbal agreement in a writing, purporting to back date the written 15 agreement from October 15, 1996, through October 14, 1998. In 16 early 1998, respondent secured a literary talent agent from the 17 William Morris Agency to represent and assist the petitioner in 18 selling her screenplays. In April of 1998, respondent went back to 19 his former occupation as a literary talent agent for Innovative 20 Artists.

21 5. In May of 1998, petitioner's new talent agent sold 22 "Mary Jane's Last Dance" and in early 1999 "Just Like a Woman" was 23 similarly optioned. Respondent was not involved in the negotiation 24 of either project and consequently the petitioner failed to pay 25 respondent's commissions allegedly owed for both projects.
26 Respondent then filed a breach of contract lawsuit, case no.
27 BC217761 in Los Angeles Superior Court. The superior court action 28 was stayed pending the results of this petition.

1 flawed. To accept Respondent's interpretation of "attempt to 2 procure" would require the Labor Commissioner to be a mind reader 3 or own a crystal ball. As here, if there was no actual deal, nor 4 evidence of past conduct, it is impossible for the Labor 5 Commissioner to determine whether the respondent would bring in a 6 licensed talent agent to negotiate the terms of the deal. Even 7 assuming that he did, this would not exempt the respondent from 8 requiring a license³. To hold that a manager may solicit for the 9 purchase of a screenplay and then subsequently hire a licensed 10 talent agent to negotiate the terms of the deal would essentially 11 amend 1700.44(d). That is solely for the legislature.

12 4. Second, and far more interesting, is respondent's 13 argument that attempting to sell a completed screenplay would not 14 constitute an "attempt to procure employment" within the meaning of 15 1700.4(a). Respondent reasons that selling a completed screenplay 16 is essentially selling services that have already been rendered and 17 therefore "does not involve employment", as any reasonable 18 interpretation of employment manifests an intent of the employer to 19 seek future services.

20 5. In support of respondent's proposition, he cites 21 Davenport v. AFH Talent Agency, TAC 43-94. In Davenport, the 22 petitioner was a writer of a novel which the respondent sold to a 23 book publisher⁴. Our case is markedly different. Here, petitioner

24 ³ Labor Code §1700.44(d) states, "it is not unlawful for a person or 25 corporation which is not licensed pursuant to this chapter to act in conjunction 26 with and at the request of a licensed talent agency in the negotiation of an employment contract." The statute requires the manager to act at the request of a licensed talent agent, not the inverse.

27 ⁴ In Davenport, the hearing officer held that, "obviously, the activities 28 of procuring or offering to procure employment in the entertainment industry is what requires a license. A literary agent is a person who represents authors in

1 is distinguished in that she is a writer of motion picture 2 screenplays. Labor Code §1700.4(b) defines "artists" as:

3
4 actors and actresses rendering services on the legitimate 5 stage and in the production of motion pictures, . . . , 6 writers, cinematographers, . . . , and other artists
7 rendering professional services in the motion picture, 8 theatrical, radio, television and other entertainment 9 enterprises."

10
11 6. The petitioner in Davenport was not rendering 12 services in the production of motion pictures or television and 13 consequently the respondent was not representing an "artist" within 14 the meaning of 1700.4(b). Here, Strouse writes screenplays to be 15 adapted for motion pictures and clearly is an "artist" within the 16 meaning of the Talent Agencies Act. In Davenport, the hearing 17 officer simply did not address the issue of whether the attempt to 18 sell a completed screenplay qualified as an attempt to procure 19 employment in the entertainment industry. The analysis in 20 Davenport is fact specific and its holding is limited to the sale 21 of a completed novel. The Labor Commissioner has historically held 22 that the sale of a novel, not intended for television or motion 23 pictures, does not fall within the purview of the Labor 24 Commissioner's jurisdiction because the author of a novel is not an 25 artist within the meaning of 1700.4(b) and consequently, the 26 holding in Davenport is neither affected, nor particularly 27 instructive here.

28 7. Assuming, arguendo, the attempted sale of a completed work without contemplation of future services is not an the sale of their works to publishers ... The respondent simply sold the petitioner's book: a finished product." The case was dismissed on jurisdictional grounds.

1 attempt to procure employment; the narrower issue becomes whether 2 the attempted sale of petitioner's completed screenplay would have 3 included, discussions about or negotiations for petitioner's future 4 services. If so, the attempted sale of petitioner's screenplay 5 would be construed an "attempt to procure employment." Petitioner 6 introduced a declaration, stating, "key points ... that [are] 7 raised in every negotiation for the purchase of a motion picture 8 screenplay is whether the screen writer who wrote the material to 9 be purchased by the acquiring party will be employed in the future 10 to perform either a "rewrite"⁵ or a "polish"⁶ on this material."
11 The declaration was timely objected to on hearsay grounds⁷.
12 However, this declaration buttressed by the parties testimony 13 established that the purchase of a motion picture screenplay 14 invariably includes discussions and/or negotiations regarding 15 "rewrites" or "polishes".

16 8. Additionally, petitioner sold her screenplays and in 17 both proposals she was contracted to and did render future services 18 in the form of "rewrites" and/or "polishes." A holding exempting 19 unsuccessful solicitations for the sale of a screenplay from the 20 protective mechanisms of the Act, simply because we are unable to 21 determine whether future services were contemplated would create an 22 unprotected avenue through the heart of the Talent Agencies Act.

24 ⁵ "According to the Writer's Guild of America, a 'rewrite' is the writing 25 of significant changes in plot, story line or interrelationships of characters in a screenplay."

26 ⁶ "According to the Writer's Guild of America, a 'polish' is the writing 27 of changes to dialogue, narration and/or action, but not including a rewrite."

28 ⁷ Cal. Code of Regulations §12031 states, "the Labor Commissioner is not bound by the rules of evidence or judicial procedure."

1 The likelihood of future services from the artist after the sale of 2 a screenplay is so overwhelming, that an unsuccessful attempt to 3 sell a completed screenplay shall be considered an attempt to 4 procure employment. The Act is a remedial statute . . . [and is] 5 designed to correct abuses that have long been recognized and which 6 have been the subject of both legislative action and judicial 7 decision . . . Such statutes are enacted for the protection of 8 those seeking employment [i.e., the artists]. Consequently, the 9 Act should be liberally construed to promote the general object 10 sought to be accomplished. To ensure the personal, professional, 11 and financial welfare of artists. Waisbren v. Peppercorn, 41 12 Cal.App.4th 246 at 254. Clearly, the Labor Commissioner cannot 13 allow literary managers to solicit for sale artists' scripts and 14 screenplays and allow that activity to be devoid of regulation, 15 unless the product is sold and future services rendered. This 16 would create a standard that would be both arbitrary and 17 unenforceable.

18 9. In short, the shopping, or unsuccessful efforts to 19 sell, completed screenplays and scripts to producers and studios in 20 the television and motion picture industries, absent compelling 21 evidence that no future services of the artist are contemplated, 22 establishes an attempt to procure employment within the meaning of 23 1700.4(a) and consequently is protected activity.

24 10. Labor Code section 1700.5 provides that "no person 25 shall engage in or carry on the occupation of a talent agency 26 without first procuring a license therefor from the Labor 27 Commissioner."

28 11. In Waisbren v. Peppercorn Production, Inc. (1995)

1 41 Cal.App.4th 246, the court held that any single act of 2 procurement efforts subjects the agent to the Talent Agencies Act's 3 licensing requirements, thereby upholding the Labor Commissioner's 4 long standing interpretation that a license is required for any 5 procurement activities, no matter how incidental such activities 6 are to the agent's business as a whole. Applying Waisbren, it is 7 clear respondent acted in the capacity of a talent agency within 8 the meaning of §1700.4(a).

9 12. Waisbren adds, "Since the clear object of the Act is 10 to prevent improper persons from becoming [talent agents] and to 11 regulate such activity for the protection of the public, a contract 12 between an unlicensed [agent] and an artist is void." Waisbren, 13 supra, 41 Cal.App.4th 246 at p. 261; Buchwald v. Superior Court, 14 254 Cal.App.2d 347 at p. 351.

15
16 ORDER

17 For the above-stated reasons, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that 18 the 1996 oral contract and 1998 subsequent written extension 19 between petitioner VICTORIA STROUSE, and respondent CORNER OF THE 20 SKY, INC., dba CORNER OF THE SKY ENTERTAINMENT, INC., is unlawful 21 and void ab initio. Respondent has no enforceable rights under 22 that contract.

23 Having made no showing that the respondent collected 24 commissions within the one-year statute of limitations prescribed 25 by Labor Code §1700.44(c), petitioner is not entitled to a monetary 26 recovery.
