Had the Legislature meant to trigger the job offer on the employer's knowledge of the permanent and stationary status, it would have so provided. However, the language of the statute is unambiguous, and the Division may not adopt regulations that give an entirely different meaning than the plain language of the statute. Commenter does not believe the current language of this subdivision needs to be revised. The statutory 60 day period gives the employer nearly two months after the employee's disability becomes permanent and stationary to determine whether or not to make a qualifying job offer to the employee. Furthermore, by regulation medical-legal reports must be prepared and submitted within 30 days (CCR section 38), and if this standard is met there is sufficient time for the employer to review the report and decide what to do. Commenter opines that if there are procedural problems that make it difficult for employers to make a determination within 60 days,

	mandates require that any job offer must comply with the provisions set forth in section 4658.1 defining a regular, modified, or alternative job offer, and that the work must last at least 12 months. Importantly, the language of section 4658.7(b) applies to all employees who have a work injury that causes permanent partial disability. Commenter states that there is nothing in the statutory language that states or even implies that these protections do not apply if the employee has lost no work time or has returned to the same job for the same employer. Commenter opines that the intent of the proposed language is to make certain all workers receive these protections but that the proposed language is awkward and would likely result in disputes and unnecessary costs and delays. In addition, commenter opines that the application of this new subdivision should be clarified. 	Commenter expresses his strong disappointment that these rules continue to obstruct the clear intent of the statutory changes to the SJDB. One item is the purchase of computer equipment, up to $1,000. Commenter opines that this benefit is extremely important to virtually every person seeking work in the modern economy. Job listings are frequently posted only on-line, and many job listings show only an email or internet address. Furthermore, listings for office jobs generally require computer literacy and familiarity with specific business programs, and even jobs that previously were considered "manual labor" now require some knowledge of computers. Commenter opines that by requiring that the employee first pay for a computer with his or her own funds makes a mockery out of the statutory directive that the voucher may be used for expenses "at the choice of the

Commenter opines that as it stands, the question is unclear and will create confusion, and it should be amended. Commenter states that a job description is completed by the employee and/or employer and should depict the physical functioning that occurs during the work day for a given job. The job description does not include activity restrictions. The physician reviews the job description and determines if he/she believes that any of the activities need to be restricted. Any restrictions are then communicated to the employee,	May 31, 2013 Written Comment		Agree. The form has been amended. DWC Form 10133.36	Commenter makes the following recommendations: The check-box at the top of this form should be eliminated. This form should be optional, available, if necessary, and not simply a repetition of previous medical reports. The area provided for the description of restrictions should include standing, walking, and sitting. This form must provide an accurate assessment of actual work restrictions, as opposed to ‘work preclusions’ similar to the 1997 permanent disability rating schedule. The form should be revised and simplified to be consistent with and not redundant of the other physician reporting forms. The form can be used if the reporting physician has not provided the necessary information in the PR-3 or PR-4 or other permanent and stationary report. This form should also allow the	Michael McClain General Counsel California Workers’ Compensation Institute May 31, 2013 Written Comment	Disagree. 	reporting physician to attach additional pages in order to fully describe the relevant work restrictions arising from the worker’s impairment. Commenter opines that the check-box on the first page is misleading and can only be checked in accordance with the reporting physician’s knowledge of the condition(s). It is also likely to lead to unintended consequences. This form is a return to work and voucher form only. A “report” that the injured worker is permanent and stationary from all conditions could be used, inappropriately, to terminate TD benefits. Commenter opines that since too many physicians could not address this question correctly, it should be deleted. Commenter states that it is important to make the use of Form 10133.36 optional. The return to work process should begin whenever the employer has adequate information to make the necessary determinations, whether they are based on the medical legal evaluator’s report, a PR-3 or PR-4, or the Physician’s Return to Work and Voucher Report.		as there is a box on the form for clarification and another box to list other restrictions. Disagree. 	Commenter opines that the problem with Form 10133.36 is that with regard to the SJDB the employer requires specific, accurate work restrictions before key decisions can be made. If the form is too restrictive, then the employee's impairment cannot be fully described and the form will be misleading and ineffective. There is considerable overlapping information with this form and the PR-3 and PR-4, yet the required information in these reports may be inconsistent. Commenter states that expecting the treating or the evaluating physician to reiterate this information on a different form is unnecessary.		Disagree. See above.	No change.
